Notice of Pre-Emptive Constitutional Challenge to the Unlawful Discrimination of Separate Racial Classes via Georgia v. Rachel

Petitioner, Rustin P. Wright, respectfully provides this Honorable Court notice, argument, authority and statement regarding the case of Georgia v. Rachel, and also its progeny, as to any consideration of that doctrine line against actions filed to vindicate some of the most basic civil and due process rights known and established among civilized society, by stating and providing:

BASIS OF CONSTITUTIONAL CHALLENGE

Petitioner's allegation of federal jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1443 appeared in the original Notice of Petition with Verified Petition for Warrant of Removal, today filed together herewith.

Petitioner reasserts 28 U.S.C. § 1443 as clear and unambiguous lawful authority for this court to take jurisdiction of this case as stated in said original Notice/Petition for Warrant of Removal.

Petitioner asserts that Federal statutes do say what they mean, and do mean what they say. 28 U.S.C. § 1443 (2014) clearly states, in full:

§ 1443. Civil rights cases

Any of the following civil actions or criminal prosecutions, commenced in a State court may be removed by the defendant to the district court of the United States for the district and division embracing the place wherein it is pending:

- (1) Against any person who is denied or cannot enforce in the courts of such State a right under any law providing for the equal civil rights of citizens of the United States, or of all persons within the jurisdiction thereof;
- (2) For any act under color of authority derived from any law providing for equal rights, or for refusing to do any act on the ground that it would be inconsistent with such law.

The plain meaning of 28 U.S.C. § 1443 was changed by the Supreme Court of the United States in State of Georgia v. Rachel, 384 U.S. 780, 86 S. Ct. 1783, 16 L. Ed. 2d 925 (1966).

A fair and full reading of the statute itself gives not even the slightest hint that its availability to all United States citizens is limited as unconstitutionally misconstrued in Georgia v. Rachel.

Prior to including 28 U.S.C. § 1443 in Petitioner's Notice of Removal, Petitioner conducted Lexis research into 28 U.S.C. § 1443, including reading apparently pertinent topical annotations and cases cited therein. Petitioner noted various citations referring to the racial discrimination component of 28 U.S.C. § 1443 cases, but it does not occur to Petitioner that violations of his basic civil rights, as against his well established Liberty Interests, are not also plainly actionable under 28 U.S.C. § 1443, regardless of any racial discrimination component existing in this case.

Petitioner relied upon numerous decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States which have explicitly and unambiguously classified Petitioner's rights at stake as "basic civil rights."
It is inconceivable to Petitioner that there might be a skin color test (the very definition of racism) to exercise 28 U.S.C. § 1443 and protect his "basic civil rights" existing within his well established Liberty Interests. Such a race based litmus test is inconsistent with the color blind society which is the objective of equal protection of the laws under the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution.

Either all citizens of the United States of America (including whites) have the same and equal right to exercise 28 U.S.C. § 1443 and protect their "basic civil rights", or the law fails for a contrary result that creates unequal classes of citizens in the exercise of "basic civil rights." <sup>2</sup> In the latter case, the law is facially unconstitutional in violation of the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution, particularly in light of the color blind nature of civil rights actions, and of the history of the construction of the civil rights statutes and code sections applying, as to all United States citizens, "the same rights and opportunities that white people take for granted." University of California Regents v. Bakke, 438 U.S. 265, 287 (1978) (from the swing vote opinion of Mr. Justice Powell).

Consequently, this court should not decline jurisdiction under Georgia v. Rachel, but afford Petitioner the equal protection of 28 U.S.C. § 1443 and retain its inherent jurisdiction over basic federal questions of Liberty Interests, so that his basic civil rights be accorded the same weight as the basic civil rights of all citizens are treated without regard to one's race. To do otherwise is to elevate the basic civil rights in racial equality above the basic civil rights in Liberty Interests.

In the considerable research done by Petitioner, all of the annotations related to a "racial" component of asserting civil rights remedies under 28 U.S.C. § 1443 were merely noted in passing and otherwise largely ignored as inapplicable to the facts of this case, regardless of any racial discrimination component existence. In the face of the broad and powerful language of the statute itself, which clearly says nothing about racial discrimination, there is simply no reason to delve into any of the racial discrimination cases, such as Georgia v. Rachel and its progeny.

Under these circumstances, no reasonable legal researcher would waste the time reading case annotations about racial discrimination, when any such element has no bearing upon the various constitutional challenges to state statutory schemes herein. In light of the facts of this case, Petitioner has no reasonable basis to expect that 28 U.S.C. § 1443 is not a perfect statutory basis for removal to federal court, and that my civil rights to equal protection of the law should not be upheld fair and square, regardless of the color of my skin and/or of any issues of racial aspects.

Petitioner further moves for declaratory relief pursuant to FRCP 57 and 28 U.S.C. § 2201 to establish the right of all litigants to have the State of Texas comply with federal law as well as all state and federal constitutional requirements in relation to basic due process components, such as even having a valid cause of action pending (a matter of law question), before restraining and invidiously prohibiting the undersigned's natural personal freedoms, extorting my money, and more importantly, my freedoms and rights to due process in valid custody regarding my child.

Federal question jurisdiction exists pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1331 and § 1367(a), with proper removal under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1443, also 1441(c), and 1446(b), and further and independently, jurisdiction exists vis-à-vis the Federal Declaratory Relief Act codified in 28 U.S.C. § 2201.

Jurisdiction firmly exists under 28 U.S.C. § 1331 wherein the federal Court may entertain the following basic constitutional questions which also implicate the various declaratory relief:

Whether state family courts are limited by Article I, Section 10 of the federal Constitution's prohibition against the any impairment of contractual obligations existing amongst the parties?

Is it a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution, and the Federal Code sections which require due process, for a state court to ignore and deny basic matters-of-law in fundamental fairness in either a civil, quasi-criminal, or even criminal conviction action?

Under the Supremacy Clause of the federal Constitution, do state courts have an affirmative duty to comply with relevant federal laws, especially when duly raised over the matters therein?

CONCLUSION

The federal questions set forth above are not all of the grounds upon which Petitioner challenges the constitutionality of the statutes and processes under attack in this case; they are presented as a mere representative example of the fact that Petitioner has raised substantial federal questions to support federal court jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331, 1441(c), and 1443, and, independently, federal court declaratory relief under FRCP 57 and 28 U.S.C. § 2201.

In view of the declaratory relief requested to address the substantial constitutional issues embodied in the instant federal questions, removal from state court to federal court is proper, and jurisdiction herein should be retained under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331, 1441(c), 1443, and 2201.

Respectfully submitted,

&lt;sup>2</sup> For an excellent, thorough, and very enlightening review of this entire subject please read University of California Regents v. Bakke, 438 U.S. 265 (1978). The entire case is very illuminating from the standpoint that all of the Justices espoused views on subject of equality under the law that go far beyond the school admissions context.
